PROGRAM OVERVIEW

In this module, participants will help participants learn about their individual, familial, cultural, nation, and professional position from the lands, waters, and climate they live and work within. A series of four half-day teachings will be conducted in relation to different places that bring to our attention particular land, being and ancestral relations, and these will be engaged for particular teachings about the history of colonial relations, human responsibilities in creation, and how to hold ourselves in times of climatic changes.

PARTICIPANTS WILL:

- Learn stories in relation to the land.
- Examine personal and political blockages to decolonization.
- Examine ways for us to be allies / working in solidarity with Indigenous people.
- Have an experiential learning experience.
